astened to the aid of the injured ones. At about the time the injured had all been assisted out of the wreckage five police patrol wagons arrived on the scene, and the policemen assumed charge of the work.

The most severely injured person, the woman supposed to be Mrs. Carson, was at once put into one of the police wagons and started for Mercy Hospital. Before the wagon had gone far on its journey the woman died. and the destination was changed to the County Morgue.

As soon as the police arrived on the scene four persons were placed under arrest. These were Conductor O'Connor and Driver Stanley. who were on the street car, and Engineer Rosscup and Fireman Meager, of the train which did the damage. The officers then turned their attention to the employees of the railroad who are responsible for guarding he crossing. There were two of them. Peter Schwartz, in the tower at the crossing, and John Allbright, who guarded the tracks from the ground level. Both, with the four other prisoners, were locked up. Allbright is the ame watchman who was employed in the same work at that crossing several months are when a similar accident resulted in the leath of two persons and the injury of others.

That the accident was due to the grossest carelessness cannot be doubted. By their own statements the two crossing men, Allbright Schwartz, were not attending to their duty and neither of them knew of the catastrophe until after the crash and when the writhing victims scattered along the tracks n by them as they both emerged from Allbright's shanty.

There is also much doubt as to the rate of speed at which the engine was running, and although the engineer and Greman say that a red light was exposed on the rear of the

The engine which did the mischief came banking down the tracks towards the crossing at a rate of about fifteen miles an hour, the railway people say.

For some reason the occupants of the engine cab did not see the car approaching the crossing, and on secount of the heavy coating of frost on the windows of the car the passengers did not see the engine.

The car was dragged for a distance of about one hundred and fifty yards, and at every foot of the distance fresh injury was added to those inflicted when the engine first struck the car. The horses became detached and ran away uninjured.
